AURELIAN

To the world the death of Claudius mattered little, because his successor was an even greater ruler. AURELIAN (270-275) was an ILLYRIAN peasant, who had risen from the ranks to the high military commands. The achievements of his reign of less than 5 yrs rival those of the first Caesar. He reorganized the army and restored the Empire. The barbarians were driven back beyond the Rhine and the Danube. Land which for some years had become virtually a separate kingdom was recovered. Zenobia, the great Queen who had set up a rival Arabian Empire at Palmyra, was brought captive to Rome. Prosperity began to return; but death snatched away the Emperor, just when he was ready to take up the work of civil reform. And in this reign, the ALEMANNI, a German people, penetrated to the Po, and threw all Italy into a panic. When they had been repulsed Aurelian built walls about Rome. Since Hannibal's day, that proud capital had feared no invader and had spread out far beyond her earlier ramparts. In Rome, Valentine had enraged much emperor Claudius II, who had issued an edict forbidding marriage. Claudius felt that married men made poor soldiers, because they were loath to leave their families for battle.

The empire needed soldiers, so Claudius, never one to fear unpopularity, abolished marriage.

Valentine, bishop of INTERAMNA, invited young lovers to come to him in secret, where he joined them in the sacrament of matrimony.

Claudius learned of this "friend of loves" and had the bishop brought to the palace. The emperor, impressed with the young priest's dignity and conviction, attempted to convert him to the Roman gods, to save him from otherwise certain execution. Valentine refused to renounce Christianity and impudently attempted to convert the emperor. On Feb. 24, 270, Valentine was clubbed, stoned, then beheaded.
